

Ultrasonic Ozone Spa

Just how does an ultrasonic ozone spa session work?

Ultrasonic waves are produced by allowing pressurized air to be forced through chambers in a special mat at the bottom of our jacuzzi tub. As the bubbles cascade and collide with each other, hundreds of thousands more are produced. The effect is similar to that of a waterfall:

Naturally produced ultrasonic wave forms that penetrate deeply into the body, including far infrared wave forms (FIR).

Via resonant adsorption, the lymphatic system is stimulated from the inside out. It takes roughly 10 minutes for the ultrasonic therapy to penetrate fully into the bones. The result is a gentle heating from the inside out which produces an enhanced detoxification effect.

As ultrasonic wave forms are produced with kinetic energy, a full deep tissue massage effect is achieved. And due to the resonant adsorption with lymphatic system stimulation, your furry companion's natural thirst mechanism is often quickly reactivated, giving them an opportunity to correctly rehydrate their bodies.

A separate silicon hose feeds ozone into the bath through an attached wide-faced diffuser.

The ozone, entering the bath at about 3%, works immediately in redox reactions, oxidizing dead skin and other waste products, while at the same time producing an abundance of "activated oxygen", O₂, simple peroxides, and organic peroxides.

Feeding the ozone through the bath water provides an enhanced effect of creating an abundance of negative ions in the air, with 20,000-30,000 negatively charged ions above the turbulent water.

The combined effect of the ozone and ultrasonic energy provides a truly therapeutic spa experience for your companion.

The above session is highly recommended for companions who require recuperative or rehabilitative assistance, in particular suffering from :

- spinal injuries
- muscle and tendon problems
- immobility problems
- wide spectrum of skin conditions including atopic dermatitis
